JEFF McCARN SAYS THIELEN SIMPLY TOOL OF MEN WHO WOULD DRIVE HIM FROM THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Attacks Attorney-general for Recommendations Made in Report on Charges

"If I had been assailed back home in my native state by a vagabond, I would let my honorable record stand as my defense," declared Jeff McCarn when addressing the supreme court this morning.

"Thielen is only the dirty stick that is being wielded by those who want to drive me from the country. I have kept my name clean all my life and I will, by the Eternal God, hand down an unsullied name to my son. I ask for a just court to see to it that I am cleared."

"That poor woman came to me, showed the marks of bruises, and told me a story that was terrible. If I had known that woman was insane when she came to me, I would have taken the matter up. I had God's word for it, and I want to say right now that no matter what is done by this court, I stand as that kind of a man."

"I do not care about what charges are sent to Washington. They will be taken care of there. I am a stranger in these islands, and there is something behind these charges, besides Thielen. I've been harassed by people who have as much as said 'I'm a criminal.' There is something behind all this."

"If I am guilty of anything that warrants a disbarment, I want to know, as I will do the same in future whenever a woman appeals to me. I'll not be guided by anyone. I am just that kind of a man. If I am guilty, I pray to be heard. I am an American citizen and I appeal to be either convicted or vindicated."

"To the attorney general I say 'Don't throw mud, because you cannot tell the truth from a lie. I need no help except that of an honest court.' McCarn began his address in a very quiet tone of voice but every word was emphatic. He, after a short time, got worked up to an intense state of excitement. His voice could be heard all over the Judiciary building, and an interested crowd soon gathered to hear the attorney."

After Judge Humphreys had spoken for a long time, the attorney general arose and said he did not think there was any necessity for him to say much. "The report speaks for itself," he declared, "and the matter was simply submitted to my department to see if any steps were necessary to be taken."

"I simply stated facts. The report does not condemn McCarn. If I had not turned in a full report, and had only stated that the charges should be dropped, the word would have been passed around that McCarn had been whitewashed. The court can decide the matter as it sees fit."

It was in the supreme court this morning the Jeff McCarn matter was taken up at ten o'clock. Messrs. Lightfoot and Humphreys appeared for McCarn, who was also in court. Judge Stanley, before the argument began, announced that his firm was appearing on behalf of George Thielen, who is at present busy at Schofield Barracks reporting a court martial case. Judge Stanley stated that he was instructed to oppose the motion to strike the attorney-general's report from the court files.

Judge Humphreys argued for a couple of hours on the motion made by him to have the attorney-general's report stricken. He declared that the report was biased and that it showed prejudice. The attorney alluded to what he called scurrilous newspaper stories that appeared in the local press, and said that these stories were to be found attached to the report of the attorney-general. He objected to such articles being incorporated in the court records.

Humphreys declared that if the court adopted the report of the attorney-general, that act would stigmatize a member of the bar. "The report is unfair on the face of it," declared the attorney for McCarn, "and judicial functions have been usurped by the attorney-general's department. All the attorney-general had to do was to either say there was enough evidence to say Mr. McCarn was guilty of professional misconduct, or not."

Judge Humphreys then went on to speak of the diamond ring episode, and he waxed wroth at the stories that have gone the rounds to the effect that McCarn knew Mrs. Thielen was insane at the time of the ring transaction. Humphreys said such stories were circulated in order to besmirch his client.

At noon the court adjourned till two o'clock this afternoon.

The Vagaries of Kings

King Otto of Bavaria is reported desperately ill as a consequence of a heavy meal of grass, dead leaves and earth. His indiscretion was an indulgence of insanity, and his insanity is commonly regarded as a curse of heredity. In certain of the marriages and matings of royalty there are consummations that are not to be devoutly wished for, and the unfortunate house of Bavaria is a shocking example. Otto is a brother of mad Louis II, who was a combination of genius and madman. Both were sons of Maximilian II, who was a genial body. He made concessions to the liberal demands of his time. He favored the unity of the German race, but preferred to have the Hapsburgs of Austria at its head instead of the Hohenzollerns of Prussia. He was more of a success as a patron of art and literature than as a king.

His father, Louis I, was also an eccentric who patronized literature and art, hired great men to hang around his court, spent money like water, became infatuated with Lola Montez, the famous dancer, and made her virtually his queen. His eccentricities increased until his subjects forced his abdication. The eccentricities and insanity of the house of Wittelsbach of Bavaria trace back to a female ancestor who was a sister of Frederick the Great of Prussia and a daughter of Frederick William I of Prussia, a combination of genius and eccentricity that bordered upon madness. This was the king who was so obsessed with the notion that giants were necessary to his army that he kidnapped big men wherever he could fear of one, until he had a regiment of knock-kneed, pin-headed skyscrapers that was the laughing stock of Europe. His daughter, who became the ancestress of mad King Otto, was always eccentric, and became a violent lunatic before her death.

The eugenists could make the genealogy of this unfortunate house, which combines so much that is admirable with much that is pitiable, a striking illustration of the consequences of injudicious marrying.—Detroit Tribune.

KINDERGARTNERS MADE AND PAID FOR COSTUMES FOR MAY DAY PAGEANT

A meeting of the Free Kindergarten and Children's Aid Association was held at 9 o'clock this morning in the Library of Hawaii, but adjourned at an early hour on account of the May Day festival at Thomas Hall. It was reported that the costumes for the pageant were made and furnished by the children themselves, with expense to the association.

The kindergarten association is facing a shortage of funds, it is reported, and the organization will appreciate any contributions, which be made by persons interested. Resignations of the Misses Johnson on account of the serious illness of Miss Jane Johnson, who for the past 13 years has been in charge of Castle home, were accepted.
